GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE COLLECTION

The church papers held by the Lennox & Addington Historical Society are composed of a small amount of material from the 19th century and a large quantity of material from the 20th. The 19th century material, although limited in quantity, is both useful and interesting. This is not a static collection. Every year, new historical material is donated and fed into the collection, and members of the congregations regularly donate contemporary items.

In order to facilitate usage of the collection, this index has been prepared as a "snapshot" of the papers as of May, 1986. A more up-to-date copy of the Church Index is stored on computer disc.

For the purpose of shelving, the Church Papers are arranged in three series: the 100 series contains an assortment of churches of all denominations; the 200 series contains the papers of Grace United, Napanee; and the 300 series contains the papers of Trinity United, Napanee.

This collection does not encompass all the material concerning religion and churches held by the Society. Other items will be found throughout the holdings, as part of other series. The researcher is advised to consult the indices to other collections at the museum.

HOW TO USE THIS FINDING AID

The first part of this finding aid (pages 1 - 64) consists of a complete description of the contents of the collection, item by item, as they are arranged in storage. The description of each item falls into nine columns:

Name	Place	Year	Type	Prov	Cond	Loc	Res	Description

Name is the author or originator of the document. Place is geographical place of origin (ie. village). Year is the date of origin. Type is variety of document, as pam (pamphlet). Provenance is the accession number. Condition relates to the physical condition of the item, with 1 being good and 3 poor. Location is the storage location of the item. Any copyright restrictions on the use of the item are indicated in the 'res' column. The final column contains a description of the subject matter covered by the item.

Beginning on page 65 is a subject index for the collection. The page numbers indicate where in the first part of the finding aid subjects may be found, and by referring back to pages 1-65, the researcher may be able to determine whether it is worthwhile for him to request the document. The subject index includes reference to specific individuals and geographical places, as well as subjects. The number in parenthesis after the page reference is an indication that the subject appears more than once on that page.

Beginning on page 90 is an index to more general references to local family names found in the collection. This index may be particularly helpful to genealogists. Again, by looking up each reference in the first part of the finding aid (pages 1-65) the user may be able to determine if it is worth looking at the individual document.

If the document looks useful, the researcher may request to see it. All original documents, whether old or of recent origin, are considered historical material and must be treated with respect. Photocopies may be purchased as needed.

With advance warning, the user may also have the updated version of the index searched by computer.
